Negro Insurrection in Panama-Attack of the Blacks on the City. From Panama we have had news by telegraph of an insurrection of the blacks. Prograph of an insurrection of the blacks. Provoked to resistance by the conscription which was ordered for the purpose of repelling the revolutionists under Mosquera and Nieto, the negroes broke out in open rebellion, and on Thursday, 28th ult., made an attack on the city of Panama. The Star, of the 29th, gives the following account of this outbreak:

"The excitament which has existed since

The excitement which has existed since last Sunday was brought to a head on Thursday morning by an encounter between an armed force outside and the troops and military inside the city. Every precaution had been taken on Wednesday by the authorities been taken on Wednesday by the authorities to oppose any attempt on the part of the outsiders to invade the city, as it was reported that a strong party had been organized in the suburbs, and intended to make an attack during the night. The inhabitants were kept in a state of suspense the entire night, guards were posted at all the entrances, and the whole military force was noder arms. No outbreak however, occurred ander arms. No outbreak, however, occurred antil after six o'clock in the morning, when some shots were fired in the Plaza of Santa Ann, apparently to intimidate some persons from the inside, who had gone out to see from the inside, who had gone out to see what was going on. At that time there was a force of some 300 people in or near the Santa Ana Square armed, with guns, muskets, rifles, lances, or whatever weapons were available. The Government force, including soldiers, police and the volunteer militia, amounted, probably to 200. The firing outside was the signal for the Government forces to commence, and the first shots from the sonare were immediately returned from the square were immediately returned from the inside.

"The firing was kept up briskly for a short "The firing was kept up briskly for a short time by both parties, the troops and militia gradually making their way toward Santa Ana; by the time they got there, however, the rebels had retreated, and no traces could be found of them, they having probably taken to the adjoining woods. Their hasty retreat was doubtless owing to the fact that Captain Miller, of the British man-of-war. The just about that time landed a strong Captain Miller, of the British man-of-war Cho, just about that time landed a strong force from his vessel, to protect foreign interests and the women and children, in the event of the city being invaled. This may be considered a very fortunate occurrence for the people inside, for had this force not been landed the chances are the outsiders would have made a very formidable resistance, if, indeed, they would not eventually have succeeded in effecting an entrance. A force was also landed from the American vessel-of-war. St. Marcia, at the American vessel-of-war, St. Mary's, at the railroad station, to protect the interests of the company there, but no attempt was made to attack the place. During the skirmish, which lasted some three hours, we can only learn of four or five men and one woman outside, and five soldiers inside, being killed, and some fifteen prisoners taken. The ring-leaders are said to be Buenaventura Correoso and Prudencia Blanco, both of whom have escaped.

"At the time we write a great deal of excitement still exists among the native inhabitants, who fear another attack, as the enemy is supposed to be within a mile or so of the city, and a strong force is kept under arms by the Government."

The War of Garibaldi in Italy-Reminis cence of Former Battles.

The present seat of war was the scene of some remarkable passages in the earlier life of the Emperor of the French, and the London Daily News has the following allusions to this fact in a leading article: Since it was the chosen residence of Gothic and Lombard lords of Italy it has experienced many changes, and how it was opened in 1831 to a revolutionary band from Bologna and Modens, the Emperor Napoleon Bologna and Modens, the Emperor Napoteon III, for one, is pretty sure to remember. His own brother led the Roman volunteers through the neighboring forest, and fought hand-to-hand with the centurions of Gregory XVI., in the wild ravines of Terni. His own mother, when in their retreat, the elder of those two young men was dying in the arms of Louis, hurried, in spite of every danger, with the passionate anxiety of woman's affection, to overtake them. H himself was a sworn comrade of the verhimself was a sworn comrade of the very men who were then contending for Italian liberty, as they are doing again now—some of whom are at this day members of the Royal Government at Turin, and others are commanding the Royal army sent into the same field to achieve the same dozign. He himself then shared in all the hazards of their enterprise, in their marches and conflicts through all those places where they had just passed in triumph, until the struggle was over, and he lay fever-struck and hidden from the Austrian pursuers in a and hidden from the Austrian pursuers in a back room at Ancona. Surely, the Emperor Napoleon III can not wish to interfere with what is going on in Umbria and the Marches, when he personally helped to set it going thirty years ago. For what would history say, and how could even an Emperorendure the contempt of the intimate associates of

Pittsburg, externally, is not an interesting city. It is grimy with the ever-belching smoke of seven-times-heated furnaces. The years record themselves upon it in films of soot; cloudy incrustations of atmosphere throbbing with industry, but not given to the lighter residuals. lighter palpitations which beat in glowing lighter painitations which beat in glowing suburban perspectives or in glimmering detaches of the picturesque. Even the hill upon the opposite side of the river has grown black. The river itself, judiciously bottled, would sell readily in the market as ink, or walnut-ketchup, or black-draught. Every thing in the vicinity is black, except the rooks and ravens—which, by force of courtast, seem fided—and one's boots in the morning at the hotel. Such, at least, is the impression likely to be left upon the mind of a transient visitor.

QUEEN VICTORIA MOURNING OVER HER DRESSING MAIN.—Queen Victoria, while in Edinburg, attended by an equerry and a lady in waiting, drove to a cemetery in the neighborhood of the Scottish Capital, to visit the grave of a young Italian dressing-maid, who seems to have won, to a remarkable degree, the affection of her royal mistress. Whereupon, an English paper says: "England's Queen paying the heart a homnge at the tomb of a humble domestic! The spectacle was one of affecting interest, and will strike into the deepest recesses of the loyal hearts of Victoria's subjects."

Every man, woman and child believes in the justness and the equality of the Consti-tution; he reveres the acting Procident; he respects the current Cabinet; he belongs himself to the army; and walks, and stands, and speaks, like a free human being. cupation and Opinio

The London correspondent of the Liverpool Albion gives the following interesting necount of the present occupation and opinions of the Italian revolutionist:

Mazzini has sown the wind, and will rean Mazzini has sown the wind, and will reap the whirlwind, which is alone what he wants to reap, as do also his hyperborean masters and accomplices, though from very different reasons from his. It is a race of revolution with them all—Democrat, Czar, Emperor and King; no longer Rex Anchovyrom, for he has sold the source of his Sardines to the ne has sold the source of his bardines to the frog-caters, who will presently devour himself. No one knows better than Mazzini how inevitable is the fulfillment of the prediction that "the Piedmontese pullet will give three crows on his own daughill, and then have his threat cut" at the instigation of that Mazzini hid whose conacte are do. of that Muscovite bird whose canards are de-coving the geese of the nationalities to their own precipitate cooking. Perfectly aware is the great conspirator of the most potential, though least suspected, element in the whole of this movement—the Greek Church; and well be known what an anythay (albeit all well he knows what an auxiliary (abelt all unconscious) to its aggrandizement will be found in Lamoriciere when the not distant the conscious) to its aggrandizement will be found in Lamoriciere when the not distant day comes for putting in the chair of Peter an ostensible puppet of France, but in reality an involuntary executor of the will of a very different Peter from him of the Keys.

Though abhoring the empurpled mendacity of the Tuileries, Mazzin is so far Bonapartean that he not only believes in the St. Helena vaticination as to Europe becoming either Republican or Cessack, but he foresees that it may be both at one and the same time, and knows the reason why that time is drawing nigh—all the more rapidly because of the one Garibaldian weakness of personal devotion to Victor Emmuel, who, being himzelf so little trustworthy, irrespective of ancestral perfidity, of which Mazzini has had instructive experiences. The present rule and dynasty in France he regards as an exhalation that France he regards as an exhalation that may vanish in a night, from one or more of many causes; and then comes the programme of the cosmopolitan Cerberus, Ledru Rollin, Koesuth and himself, although unmaking the new map of Europe sketched out by the maker of wars in the interests of peace, who is now at the cradle of his race, doubtless meditating a new lullaby.

The Supernatural Powers of a Seventh

The following we clip from an exchange: It is believed that a seventh son can cure diseases, but that a seventh son, of a seventh son, and no female child born between, can cure the king sevil. Such a favored individual is really looked on with veneration. An artist visiting Axminster in 1828, noticing the indulgence granted to one urchin in preference to others, and seeing something particular in this child, addressed his mother as follows: "This little brother appears to be a favorite. I presume he is your little. as follows: "This little brother appears to be a favorite; I presume he is your little Benjamin." "He's a seventh son, sir," said the mother. Affecting an air of surprise, I expressed myself at the instant, as being one very anxious to know what a seventh son could do? The mother, a very civil woman, told me that "she did think, to cure all diseases, should be, the seventh son, of a seventh son; but, many jolke do come to touch my son."

In April, 1826, a respectable-looking woman was engaged in collecting a penny from each, of thirty young women, unmarried; the money to be laid out in purchasing a cilver ring, to cure her son of epileptic fits. The money was to be freely given, without any consideration, or else the cherm would have been destroyed. The young women gave their pence because it would have been a pity for the lad to continue afflicted if the charm would cure him.

FROGS' MARVELOUS TENACITY OF LIFE .-A recent author has these paragraphs in one of his physiological works: Some time ago, I removed the brain from a frog, and left it on a plate to recover from the effects of other. The next morning the the effects of ether. The next morning the servant came to me with suppressed alarm, assuring me my frog would escape. "No, there's no danger, it can't escape, its head is off." "But I assure you, Sir, it's quite lively, I thought it would jump off the table." On going up stairs, I found the animal in the middle of the room. Such things are of freement occurrence.

Again, Dr. Inman, of Liverpool, "completely emptied the cranial cavity of a frog, yet found the animal quite vivacious." Mr. Lewes not only thus maitreated frogs himself, but gives directions to others: "The frog is first etherized, and then its brain, frequent occurrence. frog is first etherized, and then its brain, having been carefully removed, the whole of its skin is stripped off. The effect of the skinning is to render it totally insensible to any external impressions; you may pinch, prick, tear, burn the flesh, or cut off the limbs bit by bit, without producing the slightest sign of sensation; yet this frog will been spontaneously." hop spontaneously.

EXTRAORDINARY ELOPEMENT IN THE SOUTH A most extraordinary elopement took place last week from Ridgeville, South Carolina, under singular circumstances. The parties were a widower and the wife of a highlywere a widower and the wife of a highlyesteemed citizen of Ridgeville, who was at the time absent from home. The widower has abandoned six young children, and the partner in his guilt leaves three, one of whom is an infant. The faithless wife left for her hasband a short note, in which she rather cavallerly notifies him of her intentions, and consigns her children to his care.

DEATH FROM THE DIVINE SPIRIT OF WHISKY.

Michael McLaughlin, of Catskill, N. Y., purchased a gallon and a half of whisky, week before last, and, with the help of his wife, drank it the next day. The following morning she was found dead in her bed, and the verdict of the coroner's jury was, "Died by the visitation of God!"

Certainly, in this instance, God appeared in an unusual, and not very orthodox form. EXTENT OF THE SEWING-MACRINE BUSINESS

EXTENT OF THE SEWING-MACHINE BUSINESS, One thousand men are employed in the United States in the manufacture of sewing-machine needles, and the profits on them amount to nearly $300,000 a year. Since the introduction of the sewing-machine the sale of spool-cotton has increased to the extent of more than a million and a half angualty. nually.

DE RIVIERE AGAIN-The Gallant Zo Dr Riviere Again—The Galland Zougee Fighting for the Pope.—Captain Charles Henry Arnaud De Riviere, who has figured prominently before the American public, has smally turned up in his old role of the warrior. At last accounts De Riviere was a captain in General Lamoriciere's army, fighting for the Pope against the Sardialans.

A JUDGE'S POCKET PICKED OF OVER TWO

the country in the Republican cause, had his pocket picked in the cars, at Jersey Oity, N.

TERMILING.—The recent carthquake at Brousse, in Italy, was accompanied by a sufficient trembling of the earth at Nice, from the 3d to the 12th of June, to keep the chandellers of the houses almost continually in motion. the chandelers of the houses almost contin-ually in motion.

Great Speculation in Cotton.—The New Orleans Delte of Thursday says that one broker of that city bought on the day pre-vious 16,000 bales of cotton, valued at $750,-000. This great speculation is based upon the late storm in the South, which it is be-lieved will produce short crops.

Mazzini, the Italian Levolutionist-His Oc. | Garibaldi in Boston-Interesting Reminscence of the Dictator

On the 8th or 9th of September, in the year 1853, says the Boston Traveller, the Peruvian bark Curmen arrived at this port, with a cargo taken on board at Isley, Peru.

with a cargo taken on board at isloy, Peru. Her commander was no less a person than G. Garibaldi, then a simple captain of a trading-vessel, now, as the hero of Italy, and the subverter of thrones, occupying the attention of the entire civilized world. The signature at the bottom of the manifest at the custom-house is in an elegant hand, showing that in this particular his education in youth had not been neglected.

The Cormen was consigned to C. L. Bartlett, of this city, and the position of captain of the vessel was undoubtedly accepted by Garibaldi as a temporary occupation of his time. He could speak English in a broken manner, but could not understand it fully as delivered in speeches. At that time Garibaldi runderstood the Spanish, Italian, French and German languages, and ere this has unand German languages, and ere this has un-doubtedly mastered that of the Anglo-Saxon

It was the remark of the mate of the Car-men, in speaking of his commander, that he put his lightning or electricity into every one who was connected with him, and even his sailors would have jumped overboard to obey him. While here, Garibaldi as much as possible while here, Garibaldi as much as possible avoided public observation, and only on rare occasions was present at any large assemblege of people. He walked the streets in a contemplative mood, and he then had a very large correspondence with his patriot friends in taly, and those who had been expatriated for political causes and were then residents of this country.

At the time of his visit the Crimean war had just commenced, and the opinion was expressed in his hearing that it might result in a general European contest. If such prove to be the case, he remarked, you may depend on it that Italy will make a stronger effort than she has ever made before to regain her independence. He never spoke of his own achievements in the struggle of 1848, and his heroic movements at Rome and other places. Upon one occasion a friend suggested that he might be in danger of losing his neck. "The only regret with me," he said, smilling, "is that I have but one neck to lose for the sake of Italy.

His eye was bright, with a quick flash, He thought highly of Kossuth as a statesman, but not as a soldier. In his walks through the streets he generally took a good man, but not as a soldier. In his walks through the streets he generally took a good deal of notice of any thing new, and always ascertained the principle of any machine which he inspected. He much desired, when here, to possess some Government charts, and Capt. Sweet-zer introduced him to F. W. Lincoln, jr., the present Mayor, then in that line of business, who at once gratified the Italian Cap-tain with a full series. Garibaldi returned his thanks, and remarked to Capt. Sweetzer,

"Now I feel rich."

He remained here but a few weeks, when he left for New York, where he put the ves-sel in charge of the mate, and embarked for Italy, where he has since remained. Garibaldi undoubtedly received a good education in his youth, studying at the colleges of that country

Triumphant over their Husbands. The Paris correspondent of the Boston 'cet, remarks:

Paris has been thrown into a kind of up-roar, during the last few days, by the execuroar, during the last few days, by the execution of the threst uttered some months since by Madame Jenny d'Hericourt, of putting the ladies in the way of lording it over their lords. The book so dreaded by the sovereigns of the creation has appeared. It is called La Femme Afranchie, and has met with all the attention it deserves. It can not fail to do an immense deal of good. Madame d'Hericourt does not seek to lower man in the eves of woman, but in his own. No in the eyes of woman, but in his own. No hair-brained dreamer of the rights of woman -no twaddler imploring that justice be done to the sex is she, but a brave champion of their cause, who, grounding her arguments upon the theory she first started, some years ago, of the passing away of the "mus ge," deduces therefrom the advent of the eign of nerves and brain. In these the voman has ever been equal to the man, and therefore steam and machinery have been sent for her especial benefit and liberation from slavery.

Proudhon is so completely overthrown by the Femme Afranchie, that he will scarcely be able to rise again, while Michelet is re-duced to the part of a snivelling driveller and moralising muff, which he evidently covets. Madame d'Hericourt is the founder of the Madame d'Hericourt is the founder of the 'Daughters of '93," a society which receives into its bosom none but unmarried women, and whose mission is to go forth and regen-erate, by the example of good works, the failing heart of man in every quarter of the globe. As far as France is concerned, it is time that some wise and powerful spirit took the task in hand. Madame d'Hericourt is included the country is marching to readition. the task in hand. Madame d'Hericourt is right; the country is marching to perdition between a file of stockjobbers and a procession of courtesans. Our sons are destined to swell the ranks of destruction, and our daughters to become elements of dissolution. Our fathers had promised liberty to the world—those who deny it to the half of humanity can not be fitted to redeem that remains. All same of morality is more than the country of the same of morality is more than the country of t promise. All sense of morality is gone from among men of the French race; the women alone can belp to regain it.

Particulars of the Battle of Ancoun. Particulars of the Battle of Ancous.

The London Globe remarks that Lamoriciere has suffered the fate of many generals who have divided their forces in the presence of an enemy; but, though he had weakened his small army by detachments, he still commanded a respectable force, having with himself 11,000 meo, and having in Ancona perhaps 7,000 or 8,000 more. The rapid advance of the Picdmontese Generals forced him to choose quickly whether he would place his back to Rome, or strike off toward the Adriatic, and, overwhelming Cialdini, enter Ancona. He determined to attempt the latter, leaving a small garrison of troops enter Ancona. He determined to attempt the latter, leaving a small garrison of troops in Spoleto, of which the gallant Irish formed part. It may be, after all, that Lamoriciere moved off to the eastward in two columns, leading the van himself, and entrusting the rear to Geo. Pimodan, but by the time the Papal General closed upon Macerata, Cialdini must have divined his object, and drawn together a sufficient force at Castel Fidardo, on the extreme right of his line of investment, to gire battle and frustrate the intention of the Algerine to effect a junction with the force in Ancona.

tion of the Aigerine to effect a junction with the force in Ancona.

At the same time General Cialdini would have posted a part of his force between Osimo and Ancona to control that garrison. Lamoriciere's plan of surprise falled. Coming up with a force of 11,000 men, he appears to have found Cialdini in position at Castel Fidardo. Nevertheless, having come so far to fight, he would not retire, and, engaging in battle, he was defeated. During the battle the garrison of Ancona broke out and assailed the rear, but their movement had been foreseen, and they were driven in followed by the Piedmontese, who, now that Lamoriciere is disposed of, have probably drawn the lines more closely round Ancona. The fiest came up and had begun to pound the citudel of Ancona from the sea. Escape is impossible; the relieving force has been is impossible; the relieving force has been thrust back, and there is none other within reach of the place. It must be grating to the feelings of a victor in other fields to be driven, like a rat, in a bole.

THE FATE OF GENUS—Death of an Indi-gent Poet.—A Burlin letter announces the death of the poet Burchart, author of the tragedy of Jane Gray, in one of the hospitals of that city. Burchart was about forty years of age, and had been for some time in indigent circumstances.
